

DRAWING EXERCISE:

MAPPING YOUR GRIEF

JOURNEY

Grief is a complex and personal journey, and it often involves a mix of different emotions that may overlap or shift unexpectedly. This exercise invites you to reflect on how you're experiencing grief right now, without needing to fit into any specific pattern or timeline. Use this drawing to map your emotions, recognising that your grief may not be linear — it's okay if it feels messy or unclear. What matters most is expressing how you feel in this moment, in a way that feels true to you.

Use a simple line or shape (like a winding path or a spiral) to represent your grief experience. Label the path with words that describe what you're feeling right now. Consider using different colours or symbols to represent acute grief (strong, intense emotions) and integrated grief (ongoing, quieter emotions).